

CAA newsletter

Volume 7, Number 4

Winter 1982

annual members business meeting

The 71st Annual Members Business Meeting will be held on Thursday, February 17, 1983 at 1:00 P.M. in the Provincial Ballroom (Mezzanine Level) of the Franklin Plaza Hotel. In accordance with a short-standing (two-year-old) tradition, the business meeting will take place in the ceremonious setting of an Official Opening Session, which will include highlights of the coming program as well as a review of the Association's activities over the past year. Complimentary coffee will be available; those who wish may bring bag lunches.

Elections

The major item on the agenda of the Annual Members Business Meeting is elections.

OFFICERS. The Board of Directors proposes the following to serve as officers for 1983: President: Lucy Freeman Sandler, New York University; Vice-President: John R. Martin, Princeton University; Secretary: Paul B. Arnold, Oberlin College.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS: Candidates to serve as Directors are nominated by the Nominating Committee, which is guided by returns on the preferential ballot. This year, 1907 ballots were received: the highest return ever. The slate reported by the Nominating Committee for election to the Board of Directors in 1983 (to serve until 1987) is: William Bailey, Yale University School of Art; James Cahill, University of California, Berkeley; Nancy S. Graves, New York City; Eleanor S. Greenhill, University of Texas, Austin; Henry A. Millon, Center for Advanced Study in the Visual Arts, National Gallery of Art; and A. Richard Turner, New York University.

NOMINATING COMMITTEE: Those nominated to serve on the 1983 Nominating Committee (which selects those Directors who will be elected in 1984) are: George Bayliss, University of Michigan, Chair; Fred Licht, Boston University; Charles Rhyne, Reed College; Richard Spear, Oberlin College; and Barbara Zucker, University of Vermont.

Procedures for placing additional candidates in nomination are described in the Notice of Meeting, which has been mailed separately.

By-Laws Changes

The Board of Directors recommends two

Continued on p. 8, col. 3

announcements

Art Journal Back Issues

We have available a limited stock of back issues of the Art Journal dating from the inception of the thematic issues. Single issue price: $3.50 (plus postage and handling: for 1-3 copies, 75¢ each U.S., $1.50 each foreign; 4-9 copies, 50¢ each U.S., $1.00 each foreign). Special offer for 10 or more copies of the same issue: $2.50 each, postage and handling included. All orders must be accompanied by a covering check drawn on a U.S. bank. All sales are final. Make checks payable to College Art Association and send to CAA, 149 Madison Avenue, N.Y.C. 10016. Issues and guest editors are as follows:

Printmaking: The Collaborative Art, Donald Saff, Spring 1980.

Command Performance, Alessandra Comini, Summer 1980.

Modernism, Revisionism, Pluralism, and Post-Modernism, Irving Sandler, Fall/Winter 1980.

Photography and the Scholar/Critic, Alan Trachtenberg, Spring 1981, OUT-OF-PRINT.

Edward Hopper, Gail Levin, Summer 1981.

The Russian Avant-Garde, Gail Harrison Roman, Fall 1981.

Futurism, Marianne Martin and Anne Coffin Hanson, Winter 1981.

The Education of Artists, Ed Colker, Spring 1982.

Words and Wordworks, Clive Philpot, Summer 1982.

Earthworks: Past and Present, Robert Hobbs, Fall 1982.

Additional copies of the Winter 1982 issue, currently in press, The Crisis in the Discipline, guest editor Henri Zerner, may be obtained at the same rates as above.

Guest Curator Program

The Blaffer Gallery, University of Houston, has announced a new Guest Curator Program whereby outstanding university scholars are invited to assemble a major exhibition and write a documenting catalogue. The program provides a curatorial fee of $5,000. The Selection Committee is comprised of Anne Coffin Hanson, Yale Univ.; Agnes Mongan, Fogg Art Museum; and Robert Rosenblum, N.Y.U. Exhibition proposals in the field of eighteenth- and nineteenth-century European art history are now being solicited for the 1985-86 academic year. For details and guidelines: Toni Beauchamp, BG, UH, Central Campus, Houston, Tex. 77004. Deadline for receipt of proposals: 15 February.

Summer Seminars for College Teachers

This NEH program will offer 84 eight-week seminars during the summer of 1983. Those selected to attend will receive a stipend of $2,700 to cover travel expenses, books and other research expenses, and living expenses. The purpose of the program is to provide opportunities for faculty at undergraduate and two-year colleges to work with distinguished scholars in their fields at institutions with library collections suitable for advanced research. The 1983 Summer Seminars for College Teachers brochure, which lists seminar topics, directors, dates, and locations, will be available locally from department chairpersons or from the Division of Fellowships & Seminars, Mail Stop 101, NEH, 806 15th St., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20506 in January. Those wishing to apply should write directly to the seminar director for detailed information and for application materials. The deadline for submitting applications to directors will be 1 April. Of particular interest to teachers of art history are the following:

Modernity Versus Tradition in Twentieth-Century American Architecture, c/o Summer Sessions Office, 418 Lewisohn Hall, Columbia Univ, N.Y.C. 10027, 13 June-5 August.

Portraits: Motifs, Methods, Purposes, Richard Brilliant, Dept. Art History and Archaeology, c/o Summer Sessions Office, Continued on p. 3, col. 1

REMINDER: 1984 is coming soon, and the deadline for submission of proposals for the 1984 Annual Meeting (to be held in Toronto, February 23 through 25) is January 31, 1983. This is somewhat earlier than past submission deadlines, in order to enable us to print the Call for Papers in the Spring, rather than the Summer, issue of the newsletter.

Art history proposals should be submitted to Professor Robert P. Welsh, Department of Fine Art, University of Toronto, Sidney Smith Hall, Toronto, Ontario, Canada M5S 1A1. (416) 978-6272.

Proposals for studio sessions should be submitted to President Garry Kennedy, Nova Scotia College of Art & Design, 5163 Duke Street, Halifax, Canada B3J 3J6. (902) 422-7381.

conferences and symposia

American Criticism Now

The first national conference of the American Section of the International Art Critics Association, on the above theme, will be held in New York City on February 14 and 15. Panels and moderators: Critical Methodologies, Hilton Kramer; Decentralized Criticism, Peter Frank; Writing for the General Public, David Bourdon; and Criticism for the 80's: Who's in Charge Here, Marcia Tucker. Conference fee for non-members: $35.00; single-panel admissions also available. For additional information: AICA, Apt. 6J, 30 Fifth Avenue, N.Y.C. 10011.

Art of the Body

What is believed to be the first scholarly symposium devoted to irreversible transformations of the surface and structure of the human body for aesthetic purposes will be held at UCLA's Westwood Campus Friday—Saturday, January 28—29. The symposium will be organized into three panels: the first devoted to Oceania and Native America, the second to Africa, the third to Europe and Euro-America, followed by one session of open discussion. Conference fee is $25 in advance, $30 at door, $15 additional for banquet. For additional information: UCLA College of Fine Arts, Body-Art Symposium, A265H Murphy Hall, 405 Hilgard Ave., Los Angeles, Calif. 90024.

Baroque Academy

The Aston Magna Foundation for Music will hold its sixth and final NEH-funded cross-disciplinary Academy on Music, the other Arts and Society from June 26 to July 16 on the campus of Simon's Rock of Bard College in Great Barrington, Mass. The theme of the 1983 Academy will be European and American Arts in the Age of Revolution: c. 1770-1800. Guest faculty in art and architecture will be Howard Adams, Thomas Crow, and Frederick Nichols. For additional information: AMF, 2248 Broadway, Room 21, N.Y.C. 10024. (212) 595-1651.

Aspects of 19th-Century Photography

A symposium to be presented by The Art Museum, Princeton University, on Sunday, February 6. Speakers will be: Francoise Heilbrun, Musée d'Orsay, Paris, Edouard Baldus; Eugenia Parry Janis, Wellesley College, The Photographic Idealism of Gustave Le Gray; Marjorie Munsterberg, Vassar College, Robert MacPherson's Rome; Joel Snyder, University of Chicago, Science and Aesthetics in the Exploration Photographs of Timothy H. O'Sullivan; Robert Sobieszek, George Eastman House, Nineteenth-Century Physiognomic Photography; and Roger Taylor, Sheffield City Polytechnic, England, The British Topographic View 1850-1880. Peter C. Bunnell, Princeton University, will moderate.

The Impact of Raphael

A symposium on The Art of Raphael and Its Impact on Sixteenth- and Seventeenth-Century Art and Theory will be held at the University of Notre Dame, October 13 and 14, 1983. Principal speakers will be John O'Malley, Weston School of Theology; Kathleen Weil-Garris, N.Y.U.; John Shearman, Princeton Univ.; Richard Spear, Oberlin College; and Anthony F. C. Wallace, Univ. Pennsylvania (Anthropology). In addition to the five major addresses, there will be two juried general sessions. Interested individuals are invited to submit a one-page abstract or completed paper for presentation at the symposium. Proposed papers are to be no more than 25 minutes in length and should address the central concerns of the symposium. In addition to papers which discuss specific works of art and architecture by Raphael and/or later artists, or deal with the particular place of Raphael and his work in sixteenth- and/or seventeenth-century art theory, topics which treat more fundamental problems such as artistic influence, the definition of classicism in the Renaissance and early Baroque periods, or the relationship between the artist and his patron are also welcome. Inquiries and proposals to Charles M. Rosenberg, Dept. Art, Art History and Design, UND, Notre Dame, Ind. 46556. Deadline: 1 February.

Land and Landscape in the 18th Century

A symposium to be held at the Yale Center for British Art on Saturday, April 23, in conjunction with the exhibitions Richard Wilson and The Early Georgian Landscape Garden. Speakers and topics: Classical and Renaissance Antecedents of the Early English Landscape Garden, John Pinto, Smith College; Thoughts on Freemasonry and the English Landscape Garden, Judith Colton, Yale Univ.; The English Picturesque Garden and the French Connection, Dora Wiebenson, Univ. Virginia, Charlottesville; Ways of Sauntering: Viewing Landscapes and Gardens, John R. Stilgoe, Harvard Univ.; Figures in the Landscape, David Marshall, Yale Univ., Dept. Comparative Literature; Private Pleasure versus Public Prosperity: Attitudes towards Landscape, Carol Fabricant, Univ. California, Riverside, Dept. English; A Landscape Paradigm: Wilson and Turner, Kathleen Nicholson, Univ. Oregon; and Landscape and Social Change, Isaac Kramnick, Cornell Univ., Dept. Government. There is no charge and advance registration is not necessary.

German Studies

The Western Association for German Studies will hold its seventh annual meeting at the University of Wisconsin/Madison, 30 September-10 October, 1983. Proposals are invited for papers or entire sessions. Abstracts should be sent to Harry Ritter, Dept. History, Western Washington Univ., Bellingham, Wash. 98255. Deadline: 1 April.

Urban Life in the Renaissance

An interdisciplinary symposium sponsored by the Center for Renaissance and Baroque Studies at the University of Maryland, College Park, to be held March 3—4. Sessions include The Urban Habitat, with papers by James Ackerman, Harvard Univ.; Howard Saalman, Carnegie Mellon Univ.; and Nicholas Adams, Lehigh Univ.; and The Arts in the City, with papers by C. Walter Hodges, Sussex; Howard M. Brown, Univ. Chicago; and Richard Goldthwaite, Johns Hopkins Univ., as well as sessions on Urban Marriage and Family Life and Ritual in the Urban Milieu. For further information: Susan Zimmerman, 1103 Francis Scott Key Hall, UM, College Park, Md. 20742. (301) 454-2740.

Midwest Art History Society

The MAHS will hold its tenth annual meeting at the School of Art & Art History, University of Iowa, Iowa City from 31 March to 2 April, 1983. Conference speaker will be Agnes Mongan, Fogg Art Museum; program chair is Margaret A. Alexander, Univ. Iowa. Proposals are invited for all sessions. Abstracts should be sent to the appropriate chairperson by 15 January:

Ancient, Elaine Gazda, Kelsey Mus., Univ. Michigan, Ann Arbor 48190; Medieval, Michael Taylor, Univ. Missouri, 8001 Natural Bridge, St. Louis 63121; Northern Renaissance, Burton Dunbar, Univ. Missouri, 5100 Rockhill Road, Kansas City 64110; Italian Renaissance/Baroque, John Scott, SAAH, Univ. Iowa, Iowa City 52242; Nineteenth Century, Patricia Crown, Art Hist & Arch Dept., 109 Pickard Hall, Univ. Missouri, Columbia 65211; French Works on Paper (Principally XIX Century), Esther Sparks, Art Inst. Chicago, Michigan Ave. at Adams St., Chicago, Ill. 60603; Modern, Marcel Franciscono, Dept. Art & Design, Univ. Illinois, Urbana-Champaign 62820; Dada and the Visual Arts, Stephen Foster, School Art & Art Hist., Univ. Iowa, Iowa City 52242; American Art and the Classical Tradition, Philipp Fehl, Dept. Art & Design, Univ. Illinois, Urbana-Champaign, 143 Fine & Applied Arts Building, Champaign 62820; American Art, Vernacular and Elite, Robert L. Alexander, School Art & Art History, Univ. Iowa, Iowa City 52242; Arts of East Asia, Robert Rorex, School Art & Art Hist., Univ. Iowa, Iowa City 52242; Arts of India and the Islamic World, Wayne Begley, School Art & Art Hist., Univ. Iowa, Iowa City 52242; Traditional Art of African, Oceanic, and New World Cultures, Fred T. Smith, Dept. of Art Hist., Univ. Minnesota, 108 Jones Hall, Minneapolis 55455; General, Frank Ludden, Dept. Hist. of Art, Ohio State Univ., Columbus 43210; Issues in Teaching Art History, Wallace J. Tomasini, School Art & Art Hist., Univ. Iowa, Iowa City 52242.

Continued on p. 3, col. 3

/announcements

418 Lewisohn Hall, Columbia Univ., N.Y.C. 10027. 13 June—5 August.

The Medieval Illuminated Book: Context and Audience, Robert G. Calkins, Dept. Art History, 35 Goldwin Smith, Cornell Univ., Ithaca, N.Y. 14853. 20 June—12 August.

Art and Social Ideals in the Eighteenth Century: Ideological Imprints in the Music, Painting, and Literature of Domestic Life, Richard D. Leppert, Humanities Program, Ford Hall 314, Univ. of Minnesota, Minneapolis, Minn. 55455. 20 June—12 August.

Herb Society Scholarship

On the theory that all the world's a garden for the growth of art history: the Herb Society of America offers an annual grant of $2,500 for the study of herbs. Research may include any aspect: history, uses, landscaping, symbolism in art, etc., or, as the enticing announcement puts it: "in fact the possibilities are as limitless as the delightful plants themselves." For additional information: Mrs. Booker Worthen, Scholarship Chair, 31 Edgehill Road, Little Rock, Ark. 72207. Application deadline: 15 March.

The Teaching of Medieval Civilization

The Five-College consortium of Western Massachusetts announces a second six-week summer Institute for teacher and curriculum development sponsored by the NEH, to be held at Mount Holyoke College from 20 June to 30 July, 1983. The purpose of the Institute will be to develop interdisciplinary teaching techniques and curricula for use in the single-teacher classroom. Through focus on the twelfth century, the Institute will explore curricular and pedagogical issues relevant to the entire medieval period. Preparation of a resource book for dissemination after the Institute is planned. Resident staff will be Margaret Switten (Mount Holyoke), Fredric Chayette (Amherst), and Howell Chickering (Amherst). Adjunct staff will be Madeline Caviness (Tufts), Giles Constable (Dumbarton Oaks), Robert Haddad (Smith College), Thomas F. Kelly (Five Colleges), and Gareth Mathews (Univ. Massachusetts). Teachers in two- and four-year colleges and universities in the United States are invited to participate. Forty applicants will be accepted. For further information and application forms: Margaret Switten, Dir., NEH Summer Institute for Teacher and Curriculum Development, Box 1080, MHC, South Hadley, Mass. 01075. Ap-

Mellon Postdoctoral Fellowships at Cornell

Three two-year postdoctoral teaching-research fellowships beginning September 1983 at $15,500 per year are being offered in fifteen areas of the humanities, including American art history. Eligible candidates (U.S. or Canadian citizens) must have essentially completed the Ph.D. after June 1978 and before the February 15, 1983, application deadline. For application information: A. Geske, MPF, CU, A. D. White House, Ithaca, N.Y. 14853.

Fulbright Senior Scholarships

Applications are now being accepted for Senior Scholar Fulbright Awards abroad during 1983-84. More than 200 lecturing and research awards are available in all academic disciplines and most countries. There is now no specific deadline for receipt of applications, but as applications are received and reviewed, certain awards will no longer be available. All applicants must be U.S. citizens, hold a doctorate or other higher degree, have significant professional or teaching experience, and, in some cases, be fluent in a foreign language. Applications and further information may be obtained from the Council for International Exchange of Scholars, 11 Dupont Circle, Washington, D.C. 20036, (202) 833-4950, or from the Office of the Graduate Dean at graduate institutions (the Office of International Programs at some institutions) or of the Chief Academic Officer at undergraduate institutions.

ADAA Fellowship

The Art Dealers Association of America has begun accepting applications for its second annual $20,000 fellowship in art history. Established last year to commemorate the Association's twentieth anniversary, the ADAA Fellowship will be awarded in April to support a doctoral dissertation in the field of European or American art. Each ADAA Fellowship is for two years and may be used by the doctoral student for research in one place, for travel, or both. Application may be made only through the chair of a graduate department of art history in an American university, who must act as sponsor for the candidate. For more information on how to apply: Ralph F. Colin, ADAA Foundation, 575 Madison Ave., N.Y.C. 10022. Application deadline: 15 February.

Videotapes on Sculpture

The National Sculpture Society, the oldest and largest organization of professional sculptors in the United States, has just completed two videotapes for free loan, no rental fees, for art departments and schools. The subjects are Animal Sculpture and Sculpture in Public Places. The format of the tapes is ½ inch VHS and ¾ inch U-Matic. For additional information: Charlotte Dunwiddie, President, NSS, 15 East 26th St., N.Y.C. 10010.

Getty Museum Student Programs

The J. Paul Getty Museum announces its 1983-84 student programs for undergraduate and graduate students. Positions are available at the following levels: assistants (B.A. candidates) for 13 weeks, interns (M.A. candidates) for 26 weeks, or fellows (Ph.D. candidates) for 52 weeks. There is also an internship for students who have received a degree in conservation. For further information with instructions for application, contact Academic Affairs Department, JPGM, P.O. Box 2112, Santa Monica, Calif. 90406. (213) 459-2306. Deadline: 23 February.

Minorities Fellowships Program

The Committee on Institutional Cooperation's fellowship program, funded by the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation, is designed to increase the representation of minority groups among Ph.D. recipients. Four-year fellowships with annual stipends of $6,500 plus tuition will be awarded in 1983 to minority group members seeking a doctorate in any of a dozen humanities disciplines at any of the eleven participating midwestern universities. For complete information: CIC MFP, 111 Kirkwood Hall, Indiana University, Bloomington, Ind. 47405. Outside Indiana call toll-free (800) 457-4420.

Eighteenth-Century Life

This new interdisciplinary journal welcomes material on various aspects of eighteenth-century art—decorative arts, art history, and architecture. Manuscripts, following the most recent edition of the University of Chicago's Manual of Style, should be addressed to Robert P. Maccubbin, Editor, ECL, English Dept., College of William and Mary, Williamsburg, Va. 23185.

/conferences and symposia

Vernacular Architecture Forum

VAF is soliciting proposals for presentations at its 1983 annual meeting, to be held at the University of Wisconsin at Madison, May 4—9. Sessions will feature presentations of formal papers (twenty minutes in length); in addition, there may be some opportunity for presentations of shorter "works in progress" (ten minutes each). Submit abstracts (maximum length two pages), briefly describing the content of your paper and outlining its scope and general methodology to Richard M. Candee, Papers Chairman, VAF, Rt. 1, Box 376, Kittery, Maine 03904. Deadline: 15 February.

American Sculpture: c. 1900 to the Present

The Symposium on American Art, sponsored for the last twelve years alternately by the Department of Art History of the University of Delaware and the National Museum of American Art, will be held April 22 at the University of Delaware in Newark. The 1983 symposium will address the evolution of American sculpture from the Beaux Art tradition through current movements. For additional information: Michael Panhorst or Virginia Wagner, Co-Directors, Dept. Art History, UD, Newark, Del. 19711. (302) 738-8415.

Culture and Theatricality in Baroque Europe

The theme of a symposium to be held on February 25 and 26 in conjunction with the Annual Baroque Festival of Washington University in St. Louis and its coordinate exhibition, Baroque Theatre and Stage Design. Irving Lavin, Institute for Advanced Study, will be among the featured speakers.

grants and awards

ACLS TRAVEL GRANTS

Recipients in the most recent competition are Phyllis Pray Bober, Bryn Mawr College, to attend a seminar on Piero Ligorio, in France, in January; Ingrid. E.M. Edlund, Univ. Texas, Austin, to attend the Vith British Museum Classical Colloquium 1982: Aspects of Italic Culture, in London, in December.

CASVA FELLOWSHIPS

The National Gallery of Art's Center for Advanced Study in the Visual Arts has awarded several fellowships for scholars to pursue research at the Center during the 1982-83 academic year. Senior Fellows for the Full Academic Year: Nicolai Cikovsky, Jr., Univ. New Mexico, will complete a study of the art of Winslow Homer; Beatrice Farwell, Univ. California, Berkeley, will continue research into the relationship between popular imagery and high art in nineteenth-century France; Anne McGee Morganstern, Ohio State Univ., will study the origins, development, and social function of the Gothic genealogical tomb in the territories of the French and English nobilities; Amy Linda Neff, Univ. Tennessee, will study the impact of Franciscan spirituality on the visual arts in late thirteenth-century Italy, focusing on the illuminated manuscript Supplicationes variae; and Doris M. Srinivasan, NEH Research Fellow, plans to complete research on the multiplicity images in the principal early Upanishad texts as part of a larger study on the meaning and form of divine multiplicity in Indian art. In addition, the 1981-82 appointment of Alan Gowans, Univ. Victoria, B.C., has been extended for the 1982-83 year. Senior Fellow for Fall 1982: Hubert H. Damisch, Ecole des Hautes Etudes en Sciences Sociales, Paris, plans to complete research on the relation between the introduction of chess in Europe in the tenth to eleventh centuries and the later development of perspective theory. Senior Fellows for Spring 1983: Barbara Miller Lane, Bryn Mawr College, to complete an interpretive study of European and American architecture since about 1870, focusing on the ways in which historical references have been used by architects in the last one hundred years; Gabriel P. Weisberg, Univ. Pittsburgh, to complete a study of the Parisian entrepreneur and taste maker Samuel Bing (1838-1905). Visiting Senior Fellows for Fall 1982: Xavier Barral I Altet, Univ. de Haute Bretagne, to continue research on medieval mosaic pavements; Anatole Kopp, Univ. Paris, to pursue research on American architecture of the New Deal (1933-1941); Lynne Lawner, New York City, to investigate the relationship between the sixteenth-century Italian engraver Marcantonio Raimondi and the contemporary poet and humanist Pietro Aretino; Charlotte Virginia Stokes, Oakland Univ., will continue research on Max Ernst, focusing on Ernst's career in the United States in the early forties; Martha Anne Wood Wolff, Curatorial Fellow for the fall 1982, will study Northern Europe engravings, concentrating on those produced largely in the upper Rhine in the second quarter of the fifteenth century. Associate for Spring 1983: Alden Rand Gordon, Trinity College, Hartford, to complete the final sections of a book entitled Art Patronage in Ancien Regime France with particular attention to the role of the Marquis de Marigny.

VERMONT ARTS AWARDS

It perhaps is not insignificant (then again, it perhaps is insignificant) that the state which has provided leadership in the anti-nuclear movement has come to the fore on yet another front: the prestigious Governor's Award for Excellence presented annually by the Vermont Council on the Arts went this year to three art historians, because, according to director Ellen McCullough-Lovell, the Council decided to recognize what she called "the art of witness." "We need guides, seers and wise people to help us see what's around us and interpret it," she explained.

The three "witnesses": Julius S. Held, John A. Kouwenhoven, and Meyer Schapiro. As witness to one of the witnesses, our own (member of the CAA Board of Directors) and Brattleboro, Vermont's Wolf Kahn, who, at the awards ceremony, described his introduction to Schapiro, via Allan Kaprow: "Wolf, you gotta come up to Columbia to hear this guy Schapiro lecture. He manages to connect art with everything from atomic physics to sex, I mean, if you're an artist, he makes you feel important!"

WHITNEY MUSEUM FELLOWS

Eight graduate students have been selected as Helena Rubinstein Fellows for 1982-83 in the Independent Study Program of the Whitney Museum of American Art: Lauren Baker, B.A., Wheaton College; John Carlin, Ph.D. cand., Yale Univ.; Jennifer Dowd, B.A., Univ. Massachusetts; Janet Heit, B.A., S.U.N.Y., Purchase; Gerard McCarthy, M.A., Syracuse Univ.; Rebecca Saunders, B.A., Univ. Connecticut; Sheena Wagstaff, B.A., Univ. East Anglia, London; and Philip Walsh, B.A., Oberlin College.

INDIVIDUAL AWARDS

John Archer, Univ. Minnesota, has been awarded an NEH Fellowship for Independent Study and Research (1983-1984). His project is Ideals of Country and City in British and American Town Planning, 1700-1870.

Edward J. Olszewski, Case Western Reserve Univ., was awarded a grant-in-aid from The Swann Foundation for Caricature and Cartoon to pursue research in Rome during the Summer of 1983 on the drawings and caricatures of the eighteenth-century Roman painter Pier Leone Ghezzi.

The National Endowment for the Arts has awarded a 1982 Photographer's Fellowship to Gloria DeFilipps Brush, Univ. Minnesota-Duluth.

The Confederation Internationale des Negociants en Oeuvres d'Art (C.I.N.O.A.) presented their 1982 Art History Award to Marianne Roland Michel, College de France, for her four-part work, Jacques de Lajoue et l'Art Rocaille. The catalogue raisonné was written as a doctoral dissertation and will be published by Arthens, in Paris. Karsten Harries, Yale Univ., was chosen as runner-up for his book, The Bavarian Rococo Church: Between Faith and Aestheticism, which will be published by Yale University Press.

Cork Marcheschi, Minneapolis College of Art and Design, has been awarded a Visual Arts Fellowship by the NEA. The 1983-84 grant was made to the neon artist to further his work in the visual arts. ■

annual meeting addenda

Photographing Works of Art

A Workshop on this topic will be sponsored by the Art Libraries Society of North America Visual Resources Group on Wednesday evening, February 16, from 7:30 to 10:30 P.M. at the Franklin Plaza Hotel. This workshop will cover aspects of photographing artwork valuable for studio artists photographing their own work and for those doing photography for teaching purposes. Preregistration is required. The workshop fee is $15.00. Checks should be made payable (in U.S. funds) to ARLIS/NA and should be mailed along with name, institution and home address of registrant to: Visual Resources Workshop Registration, c/o Pamela Parry, 3775 Bear Creek Circle, Tucson, Ariz. 85715.

Alumni Reunions

As usual, a few came in after the Preliminary Program had gone to press. Wellesley College, Friday, Feb. 18, at 4:45 at The Peale Club. RSVP Page Talbott (617) 667-7496. Dickinson College, Saturday, Feb. 19, at noon, at the Franklin Plaza Hotel.

Individual Tours

This did make it into the Preliminary Program, but seems worth mentioning again: It was not possible to arrange for group tours, but a limited number of reservations may be made for individual tours of the Barnes Collection and of Winterthur. The Barnes Foundation, P.O. Box 128, Merian, Pa. 19066. (215) 667-0290. Price $1.00. Winterthur Museum and Gardens, Route 52, Winterthur, Del. 19735. (302) 656-8591. Price: $7.50. ■

WORDS IN MEMORY OF H.W. JANSON

OCTOBER 4, 1913—SEPTEMBER 30, 1982

Friends and colleagues of H. W. Janson gathered to remember him in the Auditorium of Vanderbilt Hall, New York University, on Sunday, November the 14th, 1982.

LUCY FREEMAN SANDLER

About twenty years ago, while he was Editor-in-Chief of The Art Bulletin and I was a brand-new Ph.D., Peter Janson appointed me as Assistant Editor—nearly sight unseen, as I recall, and delighted me further by offering me at the same time an appointment in the Department of Fine Arts of New York University, of which he was the long-term chairman. I remember that our first meeting was a lunch with Jean Lilly of Princeton University Press, who was going to become the new Managing Editor of The Art Bulletin. Peter, who in my mind then was Professor H. W. Janson, turned to us and said, "we will call each other by our first names—for the sake of efficiency!" No person I have ever known made efficiency more charming and humane. On the model of Peter's efficiency, I would like to recount for you today, in concise outline, what I know about his biography.

Horst Woldemar, to spell out the names he liked to hide behind the initials H. W., was born on October 4, 1913 in St. Petersburg, Russia, which I never heard him call Leningrad. His Swedish-German-Latvian parents moved their family to Finland before the Russian Revolution and then settled in Germany. Peter completed his secondary school education in Hamburg, and one of the activities of his last busy summer was to attend a fiftieth-anniversary reunion of his high school class. He was enrolled at the University of Hamburg as a student of art history from 1932 to 1935, with a year's intermission at the University of Munich, and in 1935, following his Hamburg professor Erwin Panofsky, he arrived in the United States for graduate work at Harvard, supported by a grant from the National Socialist government which he efficiently used to finance his permanent emigration. At Harvard he received the M.A. in 1938 and Ph.D. in 1942. Among his teachers were Arthur Sachs and Chandler Post. His dissertation, an unpublished classic, was on the sculpture of Michelozzo. While a student at Harvard he began to lecture at the Worcester Art Museum—Francis Henry Taylor was then the director—and having completed his coursework, accepted a position at Iowa State University, where he remained from 1938 to 1941. During this period he married Dora Jane Heineberg, who had been a Radcliffe undergraduate. In 1941 they moved to Washington University in St. Louis; during the next eight years Peter rose from assistant to associate professor and three children were born, the twins Peter and Anthony and their sister Josephine. These were followed by Charles, born in New York in 1952. In 1949, after a year as a Guggenheim Fellow, Peter came to New York University as Professor of Fine Arts and Chairman of the Department of Fine Arts at the College of Arts and Science. His affiliation with New York University lasted until his death. Between 1949 and 1974, the twenty-five year period of his chairmanship, the full-time department faculty grew from three to thirteen members and the number of courses from seventeen to forty-five a year. Almost all of the current members of the department were discovered by Peter Janson, and he saw to it that six worthy women scholars attained tenure while he was chairman, an achievement of which no other department at New York University could boast. Peter enthusiastically welcomed a nascent program in urban design studies which had been initiated by Phyllis Bober at the University Heights Campus of N.Y.U., and obtained a large NEH grant for its development. He was instrumental in enlisting the support of Mrs. Abby Grey for the construction of the Grey Art Gallery to house N.Y.U.'s heretofore homeless art collection and for the provision of handsome new quarters for the department. To the N.Y.U. art collection he and Dora Jane made significant gifts; and Peter stocked the department library with recent publications and even deposited his own library in that of the department.

Peter Janson's teaching—at Washington Square and at the Institute of Fine Arts—ranged widely. Little wonder from the author of the History of Art, although he once said to an interviewer that after the book came out he left the teaching of the introductory art history course to his colleagues; he suspected, he said, that he would be "far more tempted than anyone else to quote myself." But he was counted on to offer Renaissance courses at Washington Square and Donatello seminars at the Institute of Fine Arts, and from an early date introduced a graduate course on sculpture from Canova to Calder. This extension into the present was considered to be pretty daring when I arrived at the Institute in 1955. In more recent times, Peter's profound interest in nineteenth-century sculpture encouraged the research of a new group of Institute of Fine Arts students, and his fascination with cross-cultural movements from East to West and back resulted in an innovative undergraduate course which he offered first in 1978 after a year spent in preparation at the National Humanities Institute in New Haven. In 1979 he received the College Art Association's Award for Distinguished Teaching of Art History.

Peter's bibliography fills eight pages in the volume of essays published in his honor in 1981, which to his evident delight we titled Art the Ape of Nature. Even had he never written History of Art, his published work would have been impressive. He wrote hundreds of introductions, reviews, pamphlets, and articles, and edited a number of important series, including "Sources and Documents in the History of Art" and "Artists in Perspective." Sixteen of his notable articles were reprinted as a collection—16 Studies—published in 1973. Of his books, Apes and Ape Lore in the Middle Ages and the Renaissance, of 1952, was written with the aid of a grant from the American Philosophical Society and immediately followed by his first Charles Rufus Morey Award; The Sculpture of Donatello, of 1957, was written with the support of his two Guggenheim Fellowships, of 1948 and 1955, and followed by his second Charles Rufus Morey Award, in 1957. Admirable efficiency! After having given the Mellon Lectures on nineteenth-century sculpture in 1974 at the National Gallery and collaborated with Peter Fusco on a major exhibition of French nineteenth-century sculpture, The Romantics to Rodin, in 1980, Peter completed just last summer his monumental study of nineteenth-century sculpture.

Of Peter's History of Art, first edition 1962, second edition 1978, published by Harry N. Abrams and Prentice-Hall, of History of Art's predecessors, The Story of Painting for Young People, The Picture History of Painting, and Key Monuments of the History of Art, all written with Dora Jane, and of the offshoots of History of Art—History of Art and Music, with Dora Jane and Joseph Kerman, and the History of Art for Young People—of the fourteen foreign language editions of History of Art, and the more than two million copies in print—of all this I would like to tell one little story which Peter made part of my instruction in pedagogy. When I first came to Washington Square, I was asked to teach a "service" course—with 130 students—that proposed to treat the entire history of western art in one semester. Nearly overwhelmed by this challenge, I said to Peter, "of course I'll use your book." "No," said he, "use Gombrich." (That is, Gombrich's Story of Art). We soon stopped giving that course, but it is still widely offered, and in a practical-minded response to clear needs, Peter's History of Art for Young People was transformed into A Basic History of Art, in 1973, and was recently revised by his son Tony Janson.

From 1952 to 1955 Peter was the Book Review Editor of The Art Bulletin. Ten years later he was the Editor-in-Chief. As Editor he presided over both a great expansion of The Art Bulletin and the revival of the College Art Association's Monograph Series, these made possible by a grant from The Samuel H. Kress Foundation on the occasion of the fiftieth anniversary of The Art Bulletin. Peter continued to be indispensable to the program of scholarly publications of the College Art Association to the end—he was the Chairman of the Art Bulletin Committee and was also chairman of the Millard Meiss Publication Fund Committee, which has been supporting publication of selected art historical studies since 1975 on behalf of the College Art Association.

Finally, in the wider reaches of the art historical discipline, Peter was twice a member of the Board of Directors of the College Art Association, from 1959 to 1963 and from 1976 to 1980, and he was President of the Association from 1970 to 1972. He was the College Art Association's delegate to the American Council of Learned Societies and the Chairman of the National Committee for the History of Art. He was the past President of the Renaissance Society of America. Internationally, he was a Vice President of the Comité International d'histoire de l'art. The last item he asked to have inserted in the College Art Association's newsletter was the announcement of the XXV International Congress of Art History in Vienna in September 1983—a meeting he was instrumental in organizing.

In 1980 Peter Janson was awarded an honorary degree by his own institution. The citation extolled him as builder of the Department of Fine Arts at New York University, distinguished scholar and great teacher, leader of the community of art historians in this country and abroad, and as interpreter of the history of art to the entire world.

WILLIAM S. HECKSCHER

Brevis esse laboro, obscurus fio

The years in Janson's life I wish to discuss are 1933 until 1936. The place—Hamburg. The time—when Erwin Panofsky was packing his suitcases to go to America. It was also the time when heroic Germans were wetting their pants at the thought that someone might have seen them talking to a Jew; the time a newly appointed professor began his introductory lecture by clicking his heels and offering the German salute while shouting Heil Hitler!—all at once; the time when a handsome and blond young woman, Lise Lotte Möller (who hailed from a farm in Schleswig Holstein) resolutely went to the Alte Rabenstrasse and rang the Panofskys' doorbell to introduce herself to Pan in order to express her chagrin at being cruelly deprived of the privilege of enrolling as his student. As it turned out, by the end of 1933, Lise Lotte Möller, H. W. Janson, and W. S. Heckscher were to form a trinity which was bonded together by a friendship aere perennius.

H. W. Janson at nineteen.

Photo: William S. Heckscher

Janson after having attended the Wilhelm Gymnasium in Hamburg, where his classmates found him "radiant"—"incredibly imaginative"—passed his Abitur on the 2nd of February 1932. I think he spent the first academic year in Munich. I presume under the tutelage of the gifted but treacherous Wilhelm Pinder. I myself was at that time at N.Y.U. In the spring of '33, when Panofsky and I returned to Germany, our boat was greeted at the entrance of the Elbe River by a forest of masts displaying, in endless repetition, the swastika flag of the new regime. I bought my last copy of the Hamburger Fremdenblatt which, in bold letters, proclaimed what everyone of us felt: "Schmutzwelle über Deutschland."

I presume that Janson and I first met in the autumn of 1933. I would describe the nineteen-year-old, from the first impression I had, as a slender, pale, pleasantly un-athletic human being. His wonderful eyes showed that he was bursting with curiosity, ready to critically observe, record, interpret, and formulate. He was then, and remained afterwards, a man of the via recta, which, I think, helps to explain his strengths but also his weaknesses as a scholar. Perhaps I am right if, in retrospect, I describe young Janson as totally devoid of Teutonic characteristics. His speech, terse and to the point, made one sense that here someone spoke, transforming Ciceronian cadences into German prose, which he delivered in his typically Baltic accent.

At that time Peter Janson was neither Horst nor Woldemar. Janson and I called each other "Janson" and "Heckscher" and we naturally used the formal "Sie," which we also used when addressing our mistresses. In fact there was very little "duzen" going on. In those years we were understandably subdued, under constant stress. Quite in general it was a time devoid of geloïastos. Yet, it was people like Janson and Lise Lotte Möller—rarae aves indeed—with whom one could laugh about the utter futility of one's existence.

There were some twenty-five or so graduate students in the Hamburg Art Department at that time. We were like orphans abandoned in the course of an unimaginable catastrophe which had culminated in the abrupt departure of Panofsky, Fritz Saxl, Edgar Wind, Richard Salomon, Charles de Tolnay, Hans Liebeschütz. What had come in their place was either pathetic or unspeakable. And yet, we seemed to be able to keep on an even keel. As it turned out, there was in our midst only one traitor—his name forgotten.

Janson and Heckscher—apart from spending evening hours playing eighteenth-century music on their key-board instruments (J. on his custom-built harpsichord, H. on a restored eighteenth-century clavichord), alone and in unison—did all kinds of extravagant things. To name only one, they signed up for Baron von Uexküll's Seminar für Umweltforschung. Uexküll was not only a first rate scholar, he was also a gentleman and assuch a vociferous member of the academic resistance. In one of his so-called Publikums, a lecture open to the laity, he devoted a thrilling hour to a discussion of the reasons that persuaded dogs to lift their legs at lamp-posts. Janson and I dealt in a joint report with human Umwelt problems of a slightly different kind. He, in his part, argued that the distance at which the human eye could still discern three dimensions was limited to 42 meters. As Janson pointed out, that knowledge must have been at the back of the minds of the ancient architects planning the Pantheon in Rome. In it, the diameter of the rotunda and the height of the structure both measure 42 meters. Whether the Romans arrived at his insight intuitively or by reasoned calculation, no one could tell. Whatever the motivation, the architects had chosen those measurements with the agreeable result that a normal pair of human eyes could see from the ground of the Pantheon the stereometric concavity of the coffered ceiling. However, we committed on that occasion a horrendous blunder: we cited Jewish authorities. The next day a warning came from the academic authorities to whom our betrayal of a true Germanic science had apparently been reported by one of the ubiquitous Gestapo Spitzels.

Americans on the whole are blissfully ignorant—and nobody can blame them for it—of the truly surrealistic situation under which we pursued our studies. We were literally expecting every moment, day as well as night, that ominous knock at the door—and by door I mean the door of the room we were in, not the front door, because to the latter a Nazi Blockwart had a key which admitted him to the house at any time he chose.

Needless to say, our private conversation centered on how to flee the country in order to avoid ever-threatening arrest, interrogation, concentration camp, or service in the German Army. Janson's sensible plan was to get to the United States on what I think was then known as an "exchange studentship." A precondition to such a study sojourn abroad was that candidates had to join the S. A., the militia of the brown shirts. And so it came that H. W. Janson marched with his S. A. group in Munich, parading before the Führer, on the historical 30th of June 1934 when, in the course of the "great blood purge," the leader of the S. A., Ernst Röhm, was arrested and dispatched.

When the time had come for Janson to negotiate his trip to America, which would allow him to study at Harvard, we discussed the vital aspects: the oath he would have to take that he would return in order to join the German Army, the source that would finance the never-to-be-used return ticket, and other fine points. With these problems in mind, I called on the division of social services of a Jewish private bank in Hamburg which was about to wind up its affairs. I said to my friend there that I had a wonderful young scholar who desperately needed financial support for the boat ticket and other travel expenses. I pointed out that my client was not Jewish and that he wore the brown uniform of the storm troopers which the Hitlerians called "das braune Ehrenkleid"—and I encountered nothing but instantaneous understanding and utter willingness to support Janson's flight from Nazi Germany.

H. W., as you know, was born and raised in St. Petersburg in pre-Soviet Russia. Until he was six years of age he spoke Russian and then had to switch to German. The result was a kind of annoying speech defect. The Jewish bank provided a therapist who thoroughly improved his speech—a marvellous woman—who soon after ended her life in a concentration camp.

Janson and I lived together under one roof, in my mother's house, where he had his own rooms and where we shared a vast book-lined study at which, night after night, we worked, brewing endless cups of tea from the urn of a samovar, communing, yet never disturbing each other. His wonderful self-discipline, his unmatched talent for organization of work on hand, all this was demonstrated to me ad oculos. We excerpted books and articles and, in order to economize on time, we exchanged and shared those elaborate excerpts which we scribbled on legal-size sheets. Needless to say, it was Janson who devised this ingenious mutual-aid program that, among other advantages, allowed us to augment our output manifold. In a sense he became my tutor. God only knows what I contributed to his work.

The end of the Hamburg phase came in 1936, when both of us managed to get away safely—each in his own style. Lise Lotte tells me that Janson in his first letter to her from Harvard signed himself: Americanophilus.

I firmly believe that a great and creative human being ultimately creates him- or herself. Genius is self made. And yet, I feel I should mention the fountainhead of what I would call Janson's incredible stamina and also his sang-froid, and that was his mother. I had seen Frau Janson in her gloomy flat at the Hammerlandstrasse, dressed all in black—a frail and somewhat fussy German widow. But this is what happened: early in the war she was arrested by the Nazis, along with her mother and sister. The older Jansons had apparently never bothered to acquire German citizenship. Helene Janson culminated her prison-camp phase in a camp far East. That camp was overrun by the Russians, who managed to execute most of its inmates. She survived, thanks to the fact that she spoke fluent Russian. Within hours she enlisted in the Russian Army, valiantly fighting her way into Germany, across the Oder River. It would take too much time to trace the incredible adventures of Janson's mother. Let it suffice for me to hazard the guess that she showed the kind of innate, hidden strength and stamina which her distinguished son sublimated in his intellectual life-work.

IRVING LAVIN

To me Peter Janson always seemed larger than life—the monumental figure of a man animated by some elemental force of nature. His mountainous bulk and unfathomable vitality were superhuman, and, also like nature, he seemed to act in accordance with certain innate laws. I think I have discovered three such Peter Principles, which I shall try to define and illustrate from the period he spent at Washington University in St. Louis, where my wife and I first came to know him as students. It was 1941–49, that is, from his twenty-eighth to his thirty-sixth year.

Peter Principle No. 1 says that human beings are worth something. It is not easy to convey the luminous example Peter and Dora Jane, as we were urged to call them, provided to a generation that reached intellectual awareness during the mid-1940s as the War drew to a close. We were convinced that after such madness men would surely create a new world, in which reason and decency would at last reign supreme. Bertrand Russell was the thinker who symbolized our ideals of reason and decency, but the Jansons actually embodied them. To visit their house in the wasteland that St. Louis then seemed was like being transported to the Brave New World itself, where one discussed art and ideas and listened to records from a vast collection that ranged from Gregorian chant to New Orleans jazz. I was to graduate the following year and wanted to study philosophy and mathematical logic, so I seized the opportunity offered by one such occasion to discuss with Peter how to proceed on absolutely no money. No matter what the problem, Peter could naturally figure it out—after all, he even taught physics as part of the war effort. His solution was like a bolt, or rather two bolts from heaven: "Why not write to Bertrand Russell to see if he would take you as a student, and why not try to find some sort of grant-in-aid?" I never dreamed such things could happen, but with Peter's help they did, and the rest is history. Within a year I had proven conclusively that I was a failure as a logician, and I was back at Peter's doorstep asking for help to become an art historian. By that time he had moved to New York and he persuaded Walter Cook to find me some money and give me a job binding slides at the Institute; the following year he persuaded Walter Friedlaender to take me on as his research assistant. In sum, Peter never faltered in his faith in me, though I often did, and we all know that this principle held true for countless others over the years.

Peter Principle No. 2 holds that our universe is expanding and so should we. During his years in St. Louis, Peter also served as curator of Washington University's art collection—an agglomeration of late nineteenth-century paintings, ceramics, and miscellaneous bric-a-brac—the very pits of Philistia to a progressive liberal of the time. Peter became in effect the executive officer of a committee charged with updating the collection.* About 120 paintings and 500 objects were deaccessioned in a series of auctions held in May 1945. The sales yielded a total of $40,000, with which Peter went on what must have been an intoxicating buying spree in the New York galleries. He acquired some thirty-five works by major contemporary masters, from Max Beckmann to Carl Zerbe. Although deaccessioning had a long history, Peter was well aware that selling off a major portion of an institutional collection in order to acquire contemporary works was quite unprecedented. He said so himself in a publication about the transaction, adding that "nearly all the works were by minor academic masters, both European and American. The only conspicuous item was Frederick Remington's A Dash for Timber, which brought the record price of $23,000, more than all the other pictures put together. . . ." Peter elsewhere made the following comment on the Remington sale: "We were fortunate that a private collector had sentimental reasons for wanting that painting." (It is now a showpiece of the Amon Carter Museum at Fort Worth.) In submitting the program for acquisitions, he stated its high purpose:

The committee realized well enough that to choose wisely among contemporary works of art would be far more difficult than among those of the past, and that some of its selections would inevitably be subjected to violent criticism by conservative opinion. But the members felt that if they permitted considerations of this sort to stand in their way, they would not be fulfilling the duty of intellectual leadership imposed upon them by their calling.

Peter was putting the point about conservative opinion mildly, to say the least; here is the lead sentence of an article that appeared in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch when the new acquisitions were displayed in the new gallery Peter arranged on campus:

Chancellor Arthur Compton of Washington University, in an address before 100 guests at a preview of the university's new gallery of modern art in Givens Hall yesterday, confessed he couldn't understand what the modern paintings in the gallery meant.

The wonder about this impassioned crusade on behalf of modern art is that the focus of Peter's own research was much earlier—he was already deeply into the Donatello catalogue and the book on apes and ape lore in the Middle Ages and Renaissance. No doubt the reevaluation of nineteenth-century art that has taken place since 1945 would prevent such a transaction today. The wonder here is that with his last scholarly work, the study of nineteenth-century sculpture he finished just before he died, he placed himself in the vanguard of that same reevaluation. As the universe expanded, so did Peter.

According to Peter Principle No. 3, art history is the history of ideas. I heard him use this phrase when I was taking his undergraduate course in St. Louis, and I have never forgotten it. Incidentally, my grade in the course was A—, but only because my future wife was one of the teaching assistants who graded my final exam. I can illustrate what he meant by quoting the following two descriptions of illuminated pages from early Celtic manuscripts:

. . . the background and also the panels within the letters are filled with various forms of decoration, some geometric, such as the interlaced bands and knots, spiral and quatrefoil; others naturalistic, such as foliage, birds, reptiles, grotesques, and occasionally a human form. All are interwoven with a facility, an intricacy, and a fine sweep of line that leaves one astounded at the possibility of such execution, and also at the vigor, fancy, and infinite variety found in one initial.

Compare now this analysis:

It is as if the world of paganism, embodied in these biting and clawing monsters, had suddenly been subdued by the superior authority of the cross. In order to achieve this effect, our artist has had to impose an extremely severe discipline upon himself. His "rules of the game" demand, for instance, that organic and geometric shapes must be kept separate; that within the animal compartments every line must turn out to be part of an animal's body, if we take the trouble to trace it back to its point of origin. There are also rules, too complex to go into here, concerning symmetry, mirror-image effects, and repetitions of shapes and colors. Only by working these out for ourselves by intense observation can we hope to enter into the spirit of this strange, maze-like world.

The first quotation comes from one of the textbooks then in wide use, the second from Peter Janson's History of Art. The difference is nothing less than that between art perceived merely as an emotional effusion and art conceived as a deliberate mode of communication whose message can, with reason, patience, and sympathy, be deciphered.

Although the History of Art was not to be written until many years afterwards, the intellectual excitement that would produce it scintillated from the podium three times a week at those undergraduate lectures by the young Janson. With respect to Peter, I have ambivalent feelings towards the younger generation: I envy those who did not have to live in that benighted world before his History of Art, and I feel sorry for those who will not have shared our personal experience of his great power of illumination.

*What follows is based on materials kindly supplied by Mr. Gerald D. Bolas, Director of the Washington University Gallery of Art, and Mr. Joseph E. Ketner, Curator and Registrar: *Number Two Hundred One. Representative Paintings by Famous XIX Century Artists. . . Property of Two Educational Institutions. . . May 4. . . , Sales Cat., Kende Galleries at Gimbel Brothers, New York, 1945 (prices noted); Number Two Hundred Two. . . Public Auction Sale. . . , May 10-12, Kende Galleries at Gimbel Brothers, New York, 1945 (prices. . . ); "Dr. Compton admits he can't understand Modern Paintings," St. Louis Post-Dispatch, April 15, 1946, p. 1; R. Hynds, "W. U. Collection of Contemporary Art to go on exhibition Monday in Givens Hall," St. Louis Star-Times, April 13, 1946, p. 3; A typescript report of the Corporation Committee on Fine Arts, presumably by Janson, on the formal opening of the new Exhibition Gallery, including a list of prices of the recent acquisitions, titled Committee on Fine Arts, dated May 2, 1946; H. W. Janson, Modern Art in the Washington University Collection, St. Louis, 1947; idem, "The New Art Collection at Washington University," College Art Journal, VI, 1947, pp. 199-206; G. D. Bolas, ed., Washington University Gallery of Art, St. Louis, Missouri. Illustrated Checklist of the Collection, St. Louis, 1981.*

CRAIG HUGH SMYTH

I first met Peter Janson in the summer of 1947 aboard a small American troop transport, the Marine Jumper, a ship aptly named, which had been converted to inexpensive transportation for scholars and students just after the war. Marvelous photographer himself, Peter had been conducting a photographic campaign in Europe with someone from the firm of Brogi, in preparation for the book on Donatello he had recently undertaken. Although I had long wanted to meet him, I had no thought of it there. Looking down over the ship's railing at people still boarding from the pier in Le Havre, I heard someone near me say, "That's Mr. Janson." Ever since I have carried a vivid mental picture with me of the man he indicated, fifteen or twenty feet below, moving energetically towards the gangplank, head and shoulders intently forward. I came soon to think with great affection of this carriage of figure as expressing especially optimistic expectancy, concentrated interest, and dependable determination.

Soon we met and managed to take possession of a little area of deck, high on the side of the ship, where there had formerly been a gun emplacement. It was all open now to the sun, but still sheltered by a solid bulwark from the wind. Somehow, we kept our turret for the whole ten-day crossing—talking, reading. It was then I first experienced, with wonder and pleasure, the wide range of Peter's interests (including, to my astonishment, jazz, a special one of mine), his endless intellectual curiosity, and the depth of his learning. Best of all, he was great fun to be with. Among others who came often to share our turret were students thinking of beginning graduate study in the history of art. I first witnessed then Peter's great willingness and conscientiousness in giving counsel, in giving encouragement and help—especially his supportiveness and wisdom for people with difficulties. Neither of us was yet at New York University, but I should say, perhaps, that we suggested the Institute of Fine Arts to two of the younger people who were with us much of the time, and we could afterwards take satisfaction that they came here: Ruth Rubinstein of the Warburg and Richard Judson.

Peter had taken Professor McMahon's place at New York University by the time I arrived here, three years after our Atlantic crossing. Very shortly I had direct experience of his great, habitual optimism: when it became a question of my being acting director of the Institute. I shall never forget the firm assurance he gave me that, as soon as I had learned the ropes, administration would not take so much time as to get in the way of research and writing. Well, he was judging by his own superb capacity for simultaneous administration and scholarship: no one ever put both together more effectively or achieved a better balance between the two.

An old student of the Institute has just said to me that losing Peter is like losing the Rock of Gibraltar. He was the Rock of Gibraltar. Many is the time he has taken on responsibility for advising a student with promise who was faltering. He gave strength as well as guidance. Generosity and thoughtfulness were essentials of his nature. One saw this, for example, in his constant care, over many years, for the needs of Walter Friedlaender, great and ancient professor of the Institute. Another vivid mental picture I carry is of Peter Janson sitting on the floor of Friedlaender's bedroom-livingroom, working to install the wiring of Friedlaender's hi-fi. Nothing seemed too much for someone he felt needed him.

The Jansons and Smyths were together at the American Academy in Rome most of the year 1959-60. There we had a first-hand view of his capacity for work: we saw him writing his book, History of Art. All day long and often far into the night he would work in his study, coffee and cigarettes at hand. So sure was his grasp of the whole sweep of his subject that, as I remember it, upon writing and then revising a chapter, he could send it off to the printer before beginning the next one. At times, of course, he took breathers. Outings together at the beach—both families—were especially good, though my wife remembers Peter sitting with his feet neatly tucked up, not enjoying the sand. At Christmas time our car, which was reaching the end of its effectiveness, broke down at Bolsena while the Smyth family was driving to see friends in Florence. We went on by train without it. Afterwards, on our return to Rome, Peter, with typical kindness, offered to drive me back to get the car, which he happily termed "the mess at Bolsena." Driving with him, one could say careening with him, in his Citroen was colorful; but it was a skillful performance.

I could say a very great deal about the contribution Peter Janson made to the Institute of Fine Arts. His teaching was seminal, especially in seminars. His flow of ideas—perceptive, original—inspired the work of student after student. Again and again, his clear thinking started a student off in the right direction—to use the words of a very grateful student, who was speaking of him to me the other day. One could scarcely count the number who have had from him an essential helping hand. In faculty meetings, his judgments of students were balanced and fair. He was the spokesman for reason. At the same time, his enthusiasm for works of art was contagious. That in itself was wonderful to behold, and an essential of his teaching.

Since leaving New York, we have seen DJ and Peter often, in Italy and Zurich as well as here. On Sunday, September 26th, they came to spend a few days with us at I Tatti. Peter had finished the manuscript for his new book with Robert Rosenblum and also, at the same time, a course of treatment; and he had set off with DJ on a trip to see as much as his strength would allow. The stop at I Tatti was scheduled at the end of the trip. When Peter arrived, he seem exhausted and pale, but game as always. It was a joy to see him apparently regain his strength and be the old Peter, full of plans for the future, talking long over lunch and elsewhere with Fellows and Visiting Scholars. DJ was a marvelous, buoyant support. By the end of their stay, it seemed to us that Peter was very close to the top of his form. He took a realistic view of his illness and his chances, but he looked ahead eagerly to more travel and new projects. They left us in good spirits Thursday morning, September 30th, to take the train to Zurich.

GERT SCHIFF

It must have been early in 1962 that I for the first time received a letter signed "H. W. Janson." I was a research fellow at the Swiss Institute for Art Research in Zurich, working on the catalogue raisonné of Henry Fuseli. Professor Janson had seen a print after Fuseli's Nightmare in the home of a San Francisco psychoanalyst. This and the fact that Freud had a copy of the same print in his Vienna apartment triggered his interest. He collected material for an article and we began to correspond. Characteristically, he started our exchange of ideas by correcting a glaring error in my chronology of the various versions of the Nightmare. If this was slightly humiliating, it was more than made up for by the excitement of seeing his ideas about the picture taking shape. As so often in his career, he noticed something quite obvious—only nobody had seen it before him. The demon squatting upon the beautiful dreamer's breast referred not to the content of her bad dream, but to her traumatic physical experience of the nightmare. Moreover, in a bold conjecture Janson connected the painting with an unhappy love affair of Fuseli's, so that the dreamer became the unattainable young woman and the incubus a projection of the artist's frustrated desire, jealousy, and thirst for revenge.

This brilliant interpretation made me all the more curious about the man possessed by this sharp and inquiring mind.

Before I ever met him in person, I chanced upon his effigy. During a visit at the Warburg Institute in London I found, pasted into a copy of Apes and Ape Lore, a photograph of its author. It showed him, still a slender figure, shying at the slap of a little monkey who apparently felt offended by some of the more sinister traits which the book ascribed to his kind. Given Peter's delight in emblematic allusions, he must have relished this autobiographical Image Made by Chance.

When a few months later I finally met my correspondent "in the flesh" I found him quite imposing, not merely in stature but rather on the grounds of certain mental qualities which might well intimidate a younger colleague. What struck me first of all was an unrelenting concentration, a meticulous attention to detail that led to his instant absorption of a given fact in all its consequences; a gift that did not permit the slightest imprecision on the side of his interlocutor. There was something almost frightening about this never-slackening presence of mind—especially since it went along with the most relaxed manners and the most unconstrained cordiality. One could find a similar duality in the expression of his eyes: they could glint with intellectual excitement, twinkle with impish humor, radiate kindness—and within split seconds be as distant again as a glacier. There was indeed something distant about him.

But be that as it may, we spent the first afternoon in the most animated of conversations, in which we were later joined by Mrs. Janson. One or two years later, I found myself as an assistant professor in his department at Washington Square College. My coming to this country, and to N.Y.U., was thus entirely due to Peter, as I would call him from now on; and for that I shall always be grateful to him.

I now came to know him as a teacher and departmental chairman. He arrived every morning with his European-style briefcase stuffed to the bursting point and settled down to work. He obviously enjoyed his work; moreover, he gave the impression of never admitting any priorities among his many professional activities. Whatever he did was done with the same dedication: whether he graded exams or updated his Donatello, whether he embarked upon far-reaching research projects or edited a foreign scholar's manuscript, whether he prepared his Mellon Lectures, or hung with his own hands prints by Rauschenberg or Salvator Rosa on the walls of the study room.

At this point I cannot help citing yet another instance of his interest in office decoration. There had been in front of my study in Switzerland a balcony completely overgrown with wild roses. One day Peter asked me to sit down with my writing pad in the middle of this thorny thicket, and he took my picture in a somewhat incongruous variation on the theme of the Sleeping Beauty. The inference was, of course, my seemingly interminable involvement in the Fuseli catalogue. Later, in New York, he had this picture blown up and hung above my desk as a reminder to come to an end with the book.

He himself finished everything on time. "If you do much, you can even do more" was his maxim. Nothing was too much for him: if on a Sunday afternoon he had given a lecture in Texas, he would enter the Institute Monday morning at seven and meet his class, fully prepared, at noon.

As a teacher, he taught his students above all to think—and look—for themselves. He took great delight in refuting traditional concepts as, for instance, when he demonstrated that the colored dots in a painting by Seurat do not blend on the retina of the beholder.

There was another side to his teaching that set him apart from most of his colleagues: he would grant even the least promising beginner the benefit of the doubt. If he felt there was a potential, the student was encouraged to go on—even if that potential did not at all show in his or her grades. Nobody could be more helpful when in an oral examination the candidate was too nervous to show the true extent of his knowledge. If at all possible, Peter cast his vote for a pass. By the same token, he agreed to sponsor more dissertations than was, strictly speaking, his duty. And this was neither nonchalance nor sheer love of mankind: his judgment could be very harsh if, on a more advanced level, somebody's published work or academic performance did not meet his standards.

Was he, then, motivated by a democratic desire to make the benefits of higher learning available to the largest possible number of young people? To a great extent, yes. Out of the same conviction he lent his advice to several popular publications. Thus, we read in his introduction to The Time-Life Library of Art: "Anyone is capable of following the art historian's guidance as far as his curiosity and inclination will take him," and H. W. Janson was always willing to provide such guidance. But more than anything, I believe, he was prompted by the example of his teacher Erwin Panofsky, who, when asked why he gave A's to B or even C students, invariably replied: "How can I know how good he or she will be?"

That Peter adopted this principle was in keeping with the foremost quality of his character: his limitless generosity. He was as generous in sharing his knowledge as he was overjoyed when he succeeded in finding a position, a piece of information, or a publisher for a colleague. He put all his influence and imagination to the service of others, and in doing so, once more, did not admit any priorities.

His presence, at the Square as well as at the Institute, could be compared to a towering tree within a forest of varying growth. Quite like such a tree, he took on annual rings, in the form of little bits of paraphernalia that enlivened his comfortable dress of tweed and flannel. The first ones were a succession of exotic ties. These documented his many travels, be it in Mexico or in the Alpine countries. Next came an elegant golden wrist watch, proud symbol of the worldwide success of his History of Art. A pair of Biedermeier-style, flat, gold-rimmed eyeglasses followed. He was an Augenmensch and he requested no less from his eyes than from his mind. Thus, he spent one summer in a Paris archive photographing several hundreds of tiny poinçons, or master's stamps, in order to help Mrs. Janson in her study of nineteenth-century jewelry. Hence, it was amazing that he did not need eyeglasses before he was past sixty. However, the last and most consequential of these annual rings was—a ring, which he wore on the middle finger of his right hand; the green stone was engraved with a portrait of Berthel Thorvaldsen.

This ring bore testimony to the overriding concern of his last years: nineteenth-century sculpture.

It is perhaps the most unusual feature of Janson's personality as a scholar that he was equally capable of the broadest synthesis and of minute interpretation of esoteric phenomena. On the one hand the History of Art, on the other The Putto with the Death's Head.

He was not only an organizer on the grandest scale, but also a homo ludens, playfully searching the history of painting for Images Made By Chance, such as the little rider in the cloud on Mantegna's Saint Sebastian. When he embarked upon his last project, the systematic inventory of Western sculpture between Canova and Rodin, he proved himself once more the great organizer: almost overnight, a photo archive was established and immediately put at the disposal of interested scholars. Many of the prints bear witness to his own photographic skill, to his unique sensitivity to sculptural epidermis.

But in pursuing sculptural form and content into the most extreme of marginal phenomena, he betrayed again his exquisite sense of the esoteric. Thereby it could happen that certain themes of his research in earlier periods reappeared in different shapes. We all know his article on the giganti of Milan Cathedral, those statues that stand on the pier buttresses, in the zone just below the roof level, supporting the waterspouts. Fourteen years later, Peter was the first to photograph with a telephoto lens yet another series of giants: Geoffroy de Chaume's Apostles on the roof of Notre Dame in Paris, each 3.50 m. high, in hammered copper, the top one being a portrait of Viollet-le-Duc.

These statues were among Peter's recent discoveries, which we discussed when I last saw him, early in August, in his apartment in Zurich. He spoke with great animation about historicism in French sculpture. But all of a sudden he interrupted himself, smiled, and drew my attention to a curious sound that stood out among the diffuse noises of this summer evening. It was his neighbor's parrot, intoning every ten minutes: "Happy birthday to you," and "O du lieber Augustin." An acoustic chance image had taken precedence over Peter's art historical argument. This time, also, in his dedication to everything that was funny, beautiful, or in any other way noteworthy, he did not admit priorities.

And so I shall remember him. We shall never see his like again, but we shall always wish that he were still with us.

JUNE HARGROVE

The following remarks have been excerpted by the author from a transcription.

In the mid-sixties I elbowed my way through an anti-war demonstration at Berkeley to hear H. W. Janson speak on "Donatello and Humanism." Needless to say, my roommates insisted, "But this is not relevant"; and I replied, "it's relevant to me; I want to go to graduate school."

After the lecture I mustered up my courage to stop him outside to say that I wanted to come to New York to study nineteenth-century sculpture with him. He looked at me and said, "Why did you choose nineteenth-century sculpture?" Well, in the kind of response that only a panic-stricken undergraduate could come up with, I blurted out, "I guess because it's so huggable." He started laughing, then I started laughing, and he looked over at that hostile crowd of youths and said, "That's something that your generation certainly needs to know more about. Call me when you come to New York."

The following year I did, and I was astonished that this terribly important and busy man took time out of his schedule to give guidance to an undergraduate whom he really didn't even remember having met. What is extraordinary about that encounter is that I'm just one of hundreds of people that Peter found time for.

As I was getting ready to come to New York last week—I've been on sabbatical for a year—a colleague came into my office and said, "I don't know if you know what Peter Janson did for me this year," and proceeded to explain all that Peter had done to help him further his research project. Peter was always full of suggestions to help a good idea come to fruition. Plus, he was a "connector." He had a way of putting you in touch with just the right person to solve your problem.

Shortly after I moved to Cleveland to take my present job, The Cleveland Museum of Art inaugurated the "Year of Sculpture." Peter came out to do a series of lectures and a seminar, and he was so lionized by the local hostesses that I began to see him as Daniel about to be devoured by them. After a friend of mine had a dinner party in Peter's honor, she commented, "He's not what I expected. He's such a raconteur, a real bon vivant." (I never did ask what she really expected.)

I confess that I wasn't immune to dinner party fever that year myself; so when Dora Jane came too, I decided to invite friends over to my apartment. On the appointed day an almost predictable chaos thwarted my every effort, and I finally left the office after six, in total disarray. It was my guests of honor who saved the day. Dora Jane did things like mend a couch that had been torn and Peter made spaghetti alla carbonara, while I set the table. It is just that kind of flexibility and joie de vivre that has endeared both of them to so many.

Peter's unflappable pragmatism remained constant, even in the most unlikely situations. My favorite memory of Peter is one afternoon in Paris. Dora Jane had gone to the Bibliothèque Nationale to look at cameos, so Peter and I decided to go to Père Lachaise to photograph nineteenth-century tomb monuments. We were just about to leave when, from an upper terrace, a gardener started yelling at us and telling us that we couldn't take photos. He wanted us to turn in our rolls of film. We really didn't pay very much attention to him until I looked around and there was a herd of angry gardeners running towards us, shaking rakes and shovels. Peter took off (As Joey Janson noted later—I may hold the unique honor of having seen Peter run.) I wasn't about to hang around like a hostage. We were zig-zagging down the hill when Peter took a sharp right. The next thing I knew, I was yanked into a little mausoleum. Peter slammed the door and the gardeners thundered on by. After a moment of silence, I queried tremulously, "Professor Janson, what do we do now?" He looked over, his eyes twinkled, and he said, "First, you start calling me Peter; then I'll call a cab, and we'll go get Dora Jane for dinner." You know, after studying with Peter, I thought that Raiders of the Lost Ark was a documentary.

Peter often made serious points in class through playful anecdotes, and sometimes his comments were just plain fun. He described Dannecker's Ariadne Riding on the Back of a Panther as "Pauline Borghese à la Ringling Brothers," and compared the Guardian Angel on Dalou's Monument to Victoria's Grandchildren to a harrassed babysitter.

We learned a lot from Peter besides art history. I went to a meeting, a national meeting, which I'm sorry to say sank to an all-time low. There was everything—clashing egos, male chauvinism, and petty bickering. As I walked out of that meeting with a colleague who had been across the room, I admitted that I was appalled. "I have never in my life experienced anything like this." He shrugged and smiled, "well, that's what happens when you study with Janson," and I thought, how true. I never once heard him malign another colleague, another human being. The strongest criticism I heard him utter was "that silly man," in reference to someone who refused information to one of his students.

His philosophy really was that knowledge is based on exchange; the more you give, the more you get. I think it was ultimately his greatest asset as a teacher—this generosity—and it certainly accounts for the esprit de corps among Janson's students (and we all say that with pride). There's a network of sharing and loyalty among us that Peter generated.

In my dissertation, I wrote that to study with a great scholar is a rare privilege for a student. To study with a great man is an enriching and enduring experience. But if you were to ask me why we all loved him so much, I'd have to say, because he was so "huggable."

Continued on following page

DORA JANE JANSON

Ladies and gentlemen: I thank those of you who have reminisced about my husband, as well as those in the audience—some of you having travelled long distances to attend this service—for being here. I have two questions to address, simply because they have come up over and over again, both in letters and in conversation.

The first one is simple: those of you who have expressed a sort of frustration because there has been no occasion to which one could send flowers, please send whatever you might have wished to spend on a floral tribute to the Washington Square College, Department of Fine Arts, N.Y.U., and enclose a note to Dr. Lucy Sandler saying that it is for the department's library fund. Periodicals, which my husband used to subscribe to and then pass on, are expiring under my nose, and they should be kept on without a gap.

The second will take a bit longer. From his earliest to his latest students, in word and letter, I receive a message of puzzled wonder: "How did this phenomenal person come about?" A force of nature, he has been called, for want of anything more rational. Well, we are all, in one way or another, forces of nature, and he had the good luck to inherit a lively intelligence and a remarkably strong constitution; the first he used, the second he abused.

We have heard a lot about "Peter Janson," and I would like to talk about Horst Woldemar Janson. The name itself tells much about his roots. Horst was not, at the time of his baptism, a very common Christian name: it became a sort of "theme name" under the Nazis (and therefore anathema to himself). It simply means "woods," as a Cedarhurst, Long Island. Woldemar: in one of those moments of serendipity, it came to him that this is the same as the Russian name Vladimir. Janson: his father was of Swedish descent, but changed the E to O because his business was mainly with Germany. His mother was of German origins, the first of the family having settled in Riga in the wake of Napoleon's Russian defeat. But it is mainly about his mother, and the background from which they came, that I want to speak. Some two decades ago there appeared in Encounter magazine two consecutive articles about this unique Baltic Lutheran colony under the Czars. The Protestant virtues not only were taught (and we must remember that the Reformation stressed action, rather than faith alone), but also proved quite profitable. Honesty, devotion to one's job, probity, industriousness, reliability all combined to make this implanted, rather exclusive enclave the preferred stratum of Russia's middle-class society from which civil servants were drawn. Thus it provided white-collar jobs, secure, and rather privileged, for quite a number of the men (not all: it was also a resort town, so hotels were also managed by such people), and this in turn tended to preserve and reinforce the inculcation of these virtues.

My mother-in-law, with whom I was privileged to share the same roof for ten years after the second World War (thanks to the rescue effort of Henry Heckscher, William's brother), was a revelation to me. Forty of her more than ninety years were spent in circumstances that would have felled most of us—from near penury to outright terror. She was born in Riga in 1878, youngest by far of a family of four children. Each of the girls was taught a useful skill (hers was tailoring). But she was also Miss Career Girl of 1900, when she moved in with a sister and brother-in-law in Moscow. There, oddly enough with the American Vacuum Oil Company, she had a secretarial job to start with, and soon became the office manager. In other words, she had a strong middle-management position (as we would call it today) until she married in 1908 and produced three sons, of whom only Peter survived beyond World War II.

What amazed me most about her, and I learned more about being positive from her than I can tell you now, was her almost instantaneous and nearly faultless ability to get to the heart of any matter and to distinguish between right and wrong. She held no grudges; she was kindly, even merry (ask any of our children), and took pleasure in the smallest bits of good fortune. Bad fortune was turned into a sort of game until her luck turned. Fortitude is what it adds up to.

She would, without hesitation, have filled in any form asking her religion with "Evangelisch" (Protestant-Lutheran), whereas her son would have written in "None." But she was no more a church-goer than he. Yet, she once said that during the years when she was a displaced person after the war, it was the old prayers, learned by rote, that gave her courage. And, in the end, through his interest in one of his students' dissertation on Depictions of the Soul in Ancient Art, Horst-Peter (who had, too soon it seemed to me, inherited an interest in death by editing his revered teacher, Panofsky's, book on tomb sculpture) sidestepped death, as it were, to turn his thoughts to humanity's evolving beliefs in an after-life, ending with the rather curious version of Emanuel Swedenborg, which swept even Catholic Europe in the nineteenth century.

That teachers learn as much from their students as the latter from their teachers is a truism. Peter's students always took first place in his efforts, so no wonder that some of you, as one told me recently, feel orphaned. Once, when he came home jubilating because one of his little flock had won a prestigious scholarship, his mother said, "It always gives me such pleasure to hear that kind of news, because I have had so little opportunity in my life to help others." Therefore, service to one's fellows, in whatever form, was part of this secularized religion.

It hardly need be said that one does not have to be either Baltic or Lutheran to acquire priorities such as these. But it helps. My neighbor Mrs. Redlich, wife of the dean of the Law School, told me the other day that she had known a few people of similar cast, all of them from the region around Hamburg. And, as Hans Konrad Roethel, a companion in Pan's seminar, pointed out in a book about the three great Hansa cities, Hamburg, Lübeck, and Bremen, each had its subsidiary colonies. Riga was Hamburg's.

The mothers of two of our speakers, Mrs. Heckscher and Mrs. Schiff, shared in this heritage and its locus. They and their like formed a totally unrecognized—to this day—underground during the Nazi tyranny. No part of any cell, which might betray them, or might have been betrayed, they quietly transmitted to their children the virtues and the staying power of which I have spoken. All hail to them, and to their eminent offspring.

Thank you.

Dora Jane and H. W. Janson with Department of Fine Arts, New York University.

information

For research and publication, letters to and from Albert Bierstadt (1830-1902) and letters written about him by contemporaries are sought. Contact Nancy Anderson, Office of Research, National Museum of American Art, Smithsonian Institution, Washington, D.C. 20560.

For a biography of Mina Loy (1886-1966), any information concerning her paintings, constructions, or lamps in private collections, also correspondence, recollections, etc. would be appreciated. Contact Carolyn Burke, 322 Walnut Ave., Santa Cruz, Calif. 95060.

For a book on images of pregnancy and birth in art and literature, samples of work or information from artists, writers, and collectors is requested by Debby Beck, 46 Waban Ave., Waban, Mass. 02168. (617) 965-0020.

For a volume of recently discovered letters written by Thomas Cole from 1826 to 1832, Cole scholars are requested to contact the Editor, J. Bard McNulty, Trinity College, Hartford, Conn. 06106.

For a catalogue raisonné on Brazilian painter Candido Portinari (1903-1962), information is sought concerning his life and work: periodical clippings, letters, exhibit catalogues, books, photographs, motion pictures, recordings, personal writings, documents, etc. Contact Joao Candido Portinari, Director, Projeto Portinari, Rua Marques de São Vicente, 225, Gavea-Rio de Janeiro, 22451, Brasil.

Information as to the whereabouts (outside New York City) of silver-stained roundels or other monolithic painted glass panels from the fifteenth through the seventeenth centuries in the United States and Canada is sought for the preparation of a Corpus Vitrearum volume. Contact Timothy Husband, Assoc. Curator, Secretary of the Corpus Vitrearum, North America, The Cloisters, Fort Tryon Park, New York, N.Y. 10040.

The Portland Museum of Art is conducting a search for the paintings, drawings, papers and diaries of the Portland, Maine artist Charles Codman (1800-1842). Information on the availability of photographs would also be appreciated. Send all relevant information to Charles Codman Search, PMA, P.O. Box 4018, Station A, Portland, Maine 04101.

The Scottish National Gallery of Modern Art is planning an exhibition on The Natural History of Modern Art for summer 1984. One of the concerns of the exhibition is the hidden uses of forms and ideas of the natural world by early twentieth-century artists and by the Surrealists, including their use of quasi-scientific and pre-scientific treatments of the subject. Anyone doing research in these areas is requested to contact Douglas Hall, Keeper, SNGMA, Royal Botanic Garden, Edinburgh EH3 5LR, Scotland.

For research and publication, letters to and from Mary Cassatt (1844-1926) and letters about her written by her contemporaries are sought. Contact Nancy Mathews, Office of Research, National Museum of American Art, Smithsonian Institution, Washington, D.C. 20560.

For a catalogue raisonné of illustrated books printed in England, 1536—1600, please address suggestions and inquiries to Ruth Luborsky, Dept. of Humanities, Drexel University, Philadelphia, Pa. 19104.

For an oeuvre catalogue, private collectors, museums, etc., possessing paintings, drawings and applied art by the Dutch painter Jan Toorop (1858-1928) are requested to contact G.W.C. van Wezel, Achter de Dom 10, 3512 JP Utrecht, Netherlands.

Information wanted on all paintings by Junius R. Sloan (1827-1900), midwest portrait and Hudson River School landscape painter, for a catalogue recording of his life's work. Contact Richard Brauer, Valparaiso University Art Collection, Valparaiso, Ind. 46383. (219) 464-5365.

shows by artist members

A listing of solo exhibitions by artists who are members of the CAA. Listings should include name of artist, gallery or museum, city, dates of exhibition and medium.

Jean Tracy Amick. Eastern Michigan University Library, Ann Arbor, November 20—December 17. Paintings and Drawings.

Ruth Bavetta. Villaseñor Gallery, San Bernardino, Calif., October 25—November 19. "An Anonymous Autobiography," paintings and drawings.

Agnes Hahn Brodie. Catholic University of America, April. Arizona State University, Tempe, October 3—31. Sculptures, wall reliefs, related drawings and photographs.

Gloria DeFilippis Brush. Rasdall Gallery, University of Kentucky, Lexington, February 20—March 16, 1983 Fine Arts Gallery, Utah State University, Logan, April 1983. University of Denver Gallery, May 9—22. Oakton College Gallery, Des Plaines, Ill., June 1—19. Photography.

Sydney Drum. Illinois Arts Council Gallery, Chicago, January 4—28, 1983. New paintings. Gallery Pascal, Toronto, March 31—April 20. New Etchings. Traveling exhibition in Yugoslavia, September 15—November 30, 1983. Prints. Chicago State University Gallery, September—October 1983. Paintings.

Sally Elliott. Spark Gallery, Denver, January 7—30, 1983. "Merge/Emerge."

Heide Fasnacht. 80 Washington Square East Galleries, N.Y.C., September 30—October 22. Sculpture and drawing (1982).

Judith Godwin. Ingber Gallery, N.Y.C., October 12—30. Paintings.

Margaret Grimes. Blue Mountain, N.Y.C., November 12—December 1. Paintings.

Sue Kwak Gross. Ward-Nasse Gallery, N.Y.C., December 11—30. "The Burning Bush series."

Laurence Holden. Wesleyan College, Macon, Ga., November. Paintings.

William Hunt. Nagai Gallery, Tokyo, June 20—25, 1983. Ceramics.

Jim Jenkins. Museum of Neon Art, Los Angeles, November 3—January 15, 1983. Kinetic Constructions.

Lila Katzen. Alex Rosenberg Gallery, N.Y.C., November 11—December 11, "Sculpture returns to the Garden."

Laverne Krause. University of Oregon, June. The Fountain Gallery, Portland, October. Paintings and monoprints.

Fay Lansner. Phoenix II, West Gallery,

Washington, D.C., November 9—December 4. Paintings and drawings.

Bibi Lencek. Noho Gallery, N.Y.C., April 26—May 15, 1983. Paintings and large scale works on paper.

Richard Mayhew. Midtown Galleries, N.Y.C., November 30—December 24. "Landscapes of Time and Space."

Randolph E. Michener. Art Association of Harrisburg, Pa., October 3—23. Recent paintings.

Scott Mutter. Illinois Arts Council Gallery, Chicago, October 5—29. Photographs.

Florence Putterman. Bolen Gallery, Los Angeles, May 2—June 1. Prints, monotypes, and paintings. Mickelson Gallery, Washington, D.C. and Harrisburg Area Community College, Pa., October 1982. Prints, monotypes.

Stephen Samerjan. Klein Gallery, Chicago, April 2—May 4. Paintings. Carolyn Watson Gallery, Santa Barbara, November 18—January 15, 1983. Oil paintings, watercolors, drawings.

Rowen Schussheim. Centennial Gallery, Augustana College, Rock Island, Ill., November 28—December 17.

Naomi Waksberg. Alternative Museum, N.Y.C., September—October. Paintings. ■

people and programs

Material for inclusion in People and Programs should be sent to College Art Association, 149 Madison Avenue, N.Y.C. 10016. Deadline for next issue: 15 March.

IN MEMORIAM

Lyrical abstractionist Alice Baber died in New York City in October. At the time of her death, an exhibition of her paintings was on view at the University of Alabama in Tuscaloosa; it will be seen at four Mid-Western Museums. Baber studied at Linwood College in St. Charles, Mo., and at Indiana University in Bloomington. From 1976 to 1978 she exhibited and lectured in thirteen Latin American countries under the auspices of the State Department. She also taught and lectured at the New School for Social Research, The School of Visual Arts, C.W. Post College, Queens College, S.U.N.Y. Purchase, and the Universities of Minnesota and California. In 1981, the Alice Baber Memorial Collection of her work and that of others was established at the Greater Lafayette Museum of Art in Indiana.

Ann Lorenz Van Zanten died on August 9 in the terrorist attack on the Chez Jo Goldenberg restaurant in Paris. Van Zanten (Ph.D. Harvard) specialized in the history of nineteenth-century French architecture. At the time of her death she was curator of the archaeological collection at the Chicago Historical Society. Her husband, David Van Zanten, currently chairman of the art history department at Northwestern University, was wounded in the attack.

Gene Baro, adjunct curator of contemporary art at the Museum of Art, Carnegie Institute, and a member of the faculty of Bennington College died on November 15. During the 1960s, Baro lectured at many European universities under the auspices of U.S. government agencies; at the same time, he was critic and correspondent for several American and foreign art periodicals. Formerly a director of the Corcoran Gallery of Art and a consulting curator of prints and drawings at The Brooklyn Museum, Baro organized more than 150 exhibitions in the United States and Europe, among them the Corcoran's 33rd and 34th Biennials of American Painting, 30 Years of American Printmaking at The Brooklyn Museum, British Sculpture of the '60s at the Institute of Contemporary Art in London, and the U.S. exhibition at the 1979 São Paulo Biennale.

ACADEME

Charles Millard, chief curator of the Hirshhorn Museum, has been appointed visiting professor in the Department of the History of Art at The Johns Hopkins University. An authority on nineteenth- and twentieth-century painting and sculpture, Millard will offer a seminar during the spring of 1983 entitled Sculpture in Nineteenth-Century France. Richard Goldthwaite, professor of history at Hopkins, won the Howard R. Marraro Prize for his book The Building of Renaissance Florence: An Economic and Social History. Egon Verheyen will spend the spring at the Institute for Advanced Study in Princeton.

Rudolph Arnheim, professor emeritus of the psychology of art, Harvard University, and at present visiting professor at the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, spoke last May on Forty-Five Years after Guernica at the Prado Museum in Madrid. Next March he will give the Victor Lowenfeld Memorial Lecture at the annual convention of the National Art Education Association in Detroit. Arnheim's latest book, The Power of the Center, recently published by the University of California Press, is being translated into German, Italian, Spanish, and Japanese.

Sculptor Gilbert A. Franklin has been named to the first chair established at the Rhode Island School of Design, the Helen M. Danforth Distinguished Professorship. Franklin, who studied at RISD and has been teaching there since 1942, was most recently dean of fine arts of the college, a position he resigned in June. He has also taught at Harvard, Yale, and the University of Pennsylvania, and for several years was artist-in-residence at the American Academy in Rome.

Also from RISD comes the announcement that W. Wilson Cummer has been appointed acting head of its liberal arts division and associate professor of classical archaeology. Cummer (Ph.D. Univ. Pennsylvania), who had been a member of the adjunct faculty, will continue to teach Greek and Roman art and architecture at the College. Before joining RISD, Cummer taught at Cornell. He is a fellow of the American Academy in Rome, director of the Cornell University program in drawing and ancient architecture in Rome, and co-author of Keos II: Ayia Irini, House A, The Bronze Age.

James Stirby, formerly dean of faculty at The Moore College of Art in Philadelphia, became academic dean of The Atlanta College of Art in September. Prior to going to Moore, Stirby, a widely exhibited watercolorist, was chair of the art education department at The Maryland Institute College of Art.

An exhibition in memory of the late Bruce Goff, who died in August 1982, was organized by George Thompson, assistant professor at the College of Architecture and Design, Kansas State University. The exhibition of Goff's major residence designs and a variety of architectural designs and projects by those he affected, which opened at KSU, was also seen at Auburn University.

Barbara Price, Maryland Institute College of Art
Photo: Frank Wheat

Barbara Price, formerly dean of the Cranbrook Academy of Art in Bloomfield, Mich., has been named vice president for academic affairs and academic dean of the Maryland Institute College of Art. Price (M.A. Univ. Alabama) has had extensive administrative and teaching experience at the Corcoran School of Art, Northern Virginia Community College at Annandale, and Stillman College in Tuscaloosa, Ala., among others.

Ralph Komives has been appointed acting head of the Stephens College art department. A member of the Stephens faculty since 1979, Komives teaches three-dimensional design, ceramics, and sculpture.

Thomas D. Boyd, a classical archaeologist at The University of Texas, Austin, has been named director of the 1983 summer session at the American School of Classical Studies at Athens, Greece. Boyd (Ph.D. Indiana Univ.) has been associated with excavations at several sites in Greece as well as at sites in Turkey, Cyprus, and Egypt. Donald Stadtnr, assistant professor of art history, has been elected to a four-year term on the executive committee of the American Institute of Indian Studies' art and archaeology committee. Stadtnr, who has been on the UT faculty since 1976, received a Fulbright grant in 1979-80 for research in Banaras on medieval Indian Art.

There's been titular and to some extent substantive shuffling at The Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts, where Richard J. Boyle (whose title was changed from director of the Academy to executive director in November) has announced his resignation, effective December 31. Boyle has been at the Academy since 1973; before that he was chief curator of paintings and sculpture at the Cincinnati Art Museum and, previously, director of the Midletown Fine Arts Center in Ohio. Also in November, Frank H. Goodyear, Jr., formerly curator of the Collection, was named director of the Museum, and Ephraim Weinberg, whose title had been dean of the Academy schools, was named director of the schools.

/people and programs

Among less Byzantine goings-on at the Academy, Stephen R. Edidin has been appointed Andrew W. Mellon Foundation research associate. He will be preparing for publication a checklist of the Academy's paintings collection. Edidin is currently completing work for his Ph.D. at the City University of New York. He previously served as project coordinator for the exhibition From All Walks of Life: Paintings of the Figure from the National Academy of Design, New York, and as cataloguer for An American Perspective: Nineteenth-Century Art from the Collection of Jo Ann and Julian Ganz, Jr. at the National Gallery of Art in Washington.

Robert Tauber, lecturer in art education at The Ohio State University, has been appointed director of the University's Arts-of-the-Book Laboratory, The Logan Elm Press and Paper Mill. The Press was established to study, preserve, and foster bookmaking as an art form. Previously, Tauber (M.F.A. Ohio State Univ.) taught at St. Andrews College in North Carolina, where he established and ran The Curveship Press. He also directed The Tynyon Press and Foundry, Atlanta, Ga.

Augustana College has appointed Rowen Shussheim to head a new fiber program which will focus on tapestry, surface design, and off-loom constructions. Schussheim comes to Augustana with five years teaching experience at the Smithsonian Institution and at Arizona State University.

MUSEUMS

Ralph T. Coe, immediate past president of the Association of Art Museum Directors and former director of the Nelson Gallery of Art in Kansas City, has been awarded a one-year appointment—beginning on November 1—as senior visiting scholar at the National Museum of American Art. At the NMAA, Coe will conclude a major study on the survival of traditional Indian crafts. This project will result in a 1985 catalogue and a major exhibition which will be circulated by the American Federation of Arts in the United States and Europe for two years.

NMAA (may we now stop saying "formerly National Collection of Fine Arts"?) has also announced two promotions: Harry Lowe, formerly assistant director, has been named deputy director; Barbara Shissler Nosanow, formerly curator of education, has been named assistant director for museum programs.

David Robertson, Trout Art Gallery, Dickinson College

David Robertson has been appointed director of the Trout Art Gallery of the new Weiss Center for the Arts at Dickinson College. Robertson, who is currently completing his dissertation at the University of Pennsylvania, interned at the Victoria and Albert Museum and worked at the Yale Center for British Art and at the Rosenbach Museum.

A staff promotion and a new appointment in the curatorial department have been announced by the Memorial Art Gallery of the University of Rochester. Donald A. Rosenthal, the gallery's curator of collections since July 1979, has been promoted to chief curator. Patricia A. Anderson, curatorial assistant at Smith College Museum of Art, Northampton, Mass., since 1980, has been named associate curator for American art and administrative assistant to the director. Before joining the gallery in 1979, Rosenthal (Ph.D. Columbia) served as a research assistant in European painting at the Metropolitan Museum of Art from 1974 to 1977 and as an assistant curator of European painting at the Philadelphia Museum of Art from 1977 to 1979. Anderson (M.A. Univ. Michigan) served as an NEA fellow at the Toledo Museum of Art from 1976 to 1977, was curator of the Owens-Corning Fiberglass Corporate Collection in Toledo in 1977 and 1978, and an NEA intern at Smith College from 1978 to 1980.

The Hood Museum of Art at Dartmouth College also has some staff changes. Jacquelyn Baas, formerly assistant director of the University of Michigan Museum of Art, joined the Hood as chief curator in November, succeeding Arthur R. Blumenthal, who had resigned. Hazel Burrows, formerly curator of collections at the Eastern Washington State Historical Society in Spokane, was appointed registrar in August. She succeeds Margaret Moody Stier, who resigned to continue her education at Boston University.

Another resignation is that of Stephen Garrett, from the directorship of the J. Paul Getty Museum. Garrett, an architect, was special advisor during the planning and construction of the museum's building and gardens, a replica of the Roman Villa dei Papiri (first century A.D.). He was appointed deputy director when the new museum opened in 1974 and was made director following Getty's death in 1976.

David S. Rubin, Santa Monica College Art Gallery
Photo: Martha Alf

Elsewhere in California, David S. Rubin has been appointed director of the Santa Monica College Art Gallery. From 1977 to 1982 he served as assistant director of the Galleries of the Claremont Colleges and assistant professor of art history at Scripps College. He is a member of the International Association of Art Critics and has written for Art in America, Arts Magazine, Artweek, Art Express, Images and Issues, and the Journal of the Los Angeles Institute of Contemporary Art.

Recent curatorial appointments: Julie A. Springer (Ph.D. cand. Univ. Minnesota) has been named curator of American painting for the Georgia Museum of Art at the University of Georgia. Suzanne Tanderup Wise (M.A. Kansas Univ.) has been named curator for the Mary and Leigh Block Gallery at Northwestern University. Springer was previously a teaching associate at the University of Minnesota, and Wise most recently served as acting curator of Western art and assistant curator of European art at the Joslyn Art Museum.

David Stark is the new curator of education at the Munson-Williams-Proctor Institute in

Continued on p. 8, col. 3

classifieds

The charge for classifieds is 50¢ per word, minimum charge $10.00, advance payment required. Make checks payable to CAA.

AFRO-AMERICAN AND AFRICAN ART BOOKS, exhibition catalogs and ephemera. List available from Betty Gubert, 143 E. 37th St., New York, N.Y. 10016.

FLORENCE, ITALY: SHORT-TERM RENTALS, Modern, comfortable furnished apartments; central locations; 2-6 months. Dott. U. Caravadossi, Piazzetta del Bene 1, Florence. Telephone: 055-283-701. Information from Miles Chappell (804) 253-4385.

PHILADELPHIA EXHIBITS: 90 galleries provided detailed information on their preferences and practices for this nationally acclaimed publication. "Philadelphia Galleries: Information for Artists" is an unparalleled resource for artists throughout the country. Send $5.00 to: Philadelphia Galleries, P.O. Box 17219, Philadelphia, PA 19105.

The ACCADEMIA DEGLI IPPOPOTAMI will hold its annual meeting this year in Philadelphia on February 18th at 8:30 p.m. at Harry's place. Avanti gli ippopotami!

WORKSHOP and classes in Etching, Photo-etching and Lithography. Graphic Art Centre, Via Santa Reparata 41, Florence, Italy 50129. Tel. (055) 214-365.

SUMMER STUDY IN CRETE, GREECE. July 1-August 16, 1983. Courses: Art history, ceramics and sculpture. Write: Prof. Louis Trakis, Manhattanville College, Purchase, N.Y. 10577. (914) 694-2200, ext. 331 or 337.

TALLAHASSEE CAPITOL PROJECT. A $750 prize awarded to winner submitting design or model for a sculpture within $25,000 range. Topic: peace and understanding, 20-42 feet high, durable. Address projects by February 1, 1983 to F. Bucher, Art History, Florida State University, Tallahassee, Fla. 32306.

HUMANISM AND THE ARTS IN RENAISSANCE ITALY: A Traveling Seminar directed by William Melczer, Professor of Comparative Literature, Syracuse University (June 20-July 22, 6 credits, undergraduate/graduate; mature learners welcome). Renaissance Italy is the uncompromising stage for this interdisciplinary traveling seminar offered for the seventh consecutive year. All lectures are delivered in situ. Guest lectures by Professors Puppi, Gentili, Battisti, Pignatti, Pace, Procacci, Rearick and Joost-Gaugier. Special permits have been secured for the seminar to enter major Florentine museums and galleries at times normally closed to visitors. One-third of the program is taken up by field trips within the larger perimeter of historic Florence, and about two-thirds, by extended travel to Pisa, Lucca, Siena, Perugia, Assisi, Orvieto, Arezzo, San Sepolcro, Urbino, Ravenna, Padova, Vicenza, Venice (three days), and Rome (four days). For further information contact Syracuse University, DIPA, 335 Comstock Avenue, Syracuse, N.Y. 13210. (315) 423-3471.

SPLENDORS OF CHINA. Art study tour in Hunangshan Mountains, Guilin, Soochow, Hangchow, Sian, Peking. July 1983. Write Prof. Vito Giacalone (of Kean College), 463 West St., apt. B-938, New York, NY 10014.

STUDY-TRAVEL PROGRAMS TO THE USSR offered spring and summer by Citizen Exchange Council: "Museums and Children" (March), "Fine Arts in USSR" (March-April), "Art Restoration" (May), "Community Schools of the Arts" (June-July), "Folk Arts" (August). Details from: Citizen Exchange Council, 18 East 41 Street, New York, NY 10017; (212) 889-7960.

/business meeting

amendments to the By-Laws:

At present, only those students with an annual income of $6,000 or less are eligible for student membership. Since many graduate fellowships and teaching assistantships now pay in excess of $6,000, it is recommended that the By-Laws be amended to raise that amount to $10,000.

In order to avoid operating at a considerable deficit in 1984, it may be necessary to raise institutional dues (currently $60.00) by an amount in excess of that currently permitted by the By-Laws. It is recommended, therefore, that the By-Laws be amended to remove the restrictions currently governing the amount by which institutional dues may be raised.

For those who will be unable to attend the Annual Members Meeting, proxies have been included with the Notice of Meeting. ■

/people and programs

Utica, N.Y. Stark (Ph.D. Ohio State Univ.) was formerly assistant professor of art history at the University of Minnesota and a research associate at the Tweed Museum of Art in Duluth. The Institute has also named Linda Lott head librarian. Lott, who also has an M.L.S. degree, earned her master's degree in art history at the Rosary College Graduate School of Fine Arts in Florence.

Helen A. Harrison, formerly guest curator at The Queens Museum and an art reviewer for the Long Island edition of The New York Times, has assumed the post of consultant curator for the Guild Hall Museum in East Hampton. Trained as a sculptor and printmaker at Adelphi University, Harrison also holds a master's degree in art history from Case Western Reserve. ■

CAA newsletter

© 1982

College Art Association of America
149 Madison Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10016
Editor: Rose R. Weil
Associate Editor: Minerva Navarrete